April 5th CEER Meeting:

I'm doing this from memory, as I somehow deleted the relevant email during an email purge.

Tracy Virgil joined the CEER team to share ideas for responding to students whose behavior causes concern.

Just as Shairon had recommended, she thought a web-portal like Starfish would be useful.

Of course, many faculty (myself included) have never used Starfish, to in addition to deciding on a web-based portal, we would also need to insist that faculty become familiar with this system either through flex-week activities or a "required" web-based tutorial.

Sending out yet another official email to be largely ignored was not a first choice.

Mark Lieu did gain consent from Campus Police to have dispatch route faculty calls to the appropriate responders: i.e. police, deans, night-time-supervisor and or appropriate and as yet unconnected intervention teams such as BIT and SAS.

It was a short meeting and our next meeting as scheduled for May 10.
